Engines of Dynamism

Starting from the beginning of AD, as per one estimation, it took around 1400 years for the world population to double. But now the doubling takes place in almost fifty years!. The endless wars, wide spread pandemics and inadequate healthcare systems might have contributed to the slower population growth during the initial years of the Christian era. The rise in the levels of life expectancy, particularly in the twentieth century can be attributed certainly to the rapid progress achieved through the spread of knowledge. The biggest contributor to this miracle, undoubtedly, is education.

Yet we cannot call the rise in population levels as an indicator of progress as it has added more strains on the available resources and opportunities. The same education which drove the engines of development then, has to manage it more efficiently now. Consequently the task of designing a meaningful academic system has become extremely challenging, as it has to take into consideration both local and global parameters, that too at a time when all human systems are rapidly changing. It is impossible to design one without the total participation of all stake holders.

It is important to compose the new academic system like a symphony, tuning in many melodies, creating harmony between varying parameters. The composition may be complex but the music needs to be melodious. Each one of us has to add a note to this composition so that the opera of education can truly become the engine of progress and dynamism in the years to come.
