Essence of documentation

It is quite natural for any developing nation to strive for educating its citizens in true earnest. During initial years it was essential to focus on the number, providing opportunity for the masses to come into the mainstream. Once the initial hurdles were crossed, focus gradually shifted towards finer aspects of education. But any such shift needs reliable inputs and extensive research which necessarily hinges on quality documentation.

In our country documentation was seldom in vogue and consequently its impacts are glaring. It has impaired the continuation of culture and values. Even historical events appear mythical, particularly the ancient ones. Fortunately it is through the documentation of foreign travellers, starting from Megasthenese, we could knit our history into a comprehensive branch in humanities. They have provided a valid platform for the rightful position of our country as far as world history is concerned.

The role of documentation extends far beyond the bounds of history and culture. It is the fundamental basis for modification and development in any human systems of knowledge, particularly the academics. Initially it may appear a daunting task. But its fruits are much sweeter. It may not appear so today, but for a better tomorrow, there cannot be a better basis for transformation. A small Rosetta stone inscription of 196 BC helped deciphering the entire Egyptian history almost after two thousand years!. The quality documentations that we prepare today may not just be a routine record, instead can as well be a treasure trove for generations to come.
